As an example, we have a weBoost RV65. Runs at 7W on DC (5v usb but 12v would work too). Same device + inverter consumed 10W+. Not a biggie if you have a full-sized solar off grid power system, or just turn on the booster for an hour to check email. But matters if you want to keep it on all day and are running from a portable battery pack.

A frequent misconception is that mobile signal boosters can replace Wi-Fi entirely. While boosters significantly improve mobile signal strength, they are not a substitute for a dedicated Wi-Fi network. Mobile signal boosters enhance cellular connectivity, improving call quality and mobile data speeds, but they rely on existing mobile networks.
